PS

Larry: Good ideas all. William and Mary might be a good stop. You should get ahead of this train by doing memo to SRB with options. (No good idea goes unpunished.) Can we have by end of next week? Thanks.

PS

Glyn - I thought the prayer breakfast angle might be worked into the visit. It could work out really well. How about a visit to Charlottesville, event with UVA students, Monticello? short helo ride, not too weather dependent, Jefferson tie-in, B-Ball game????...

On the guest list, are you looking for a redo of the August version with input from State, etc?

PS

FYI: The word I get from Capricia Marshall is that both the President and First Lady are thinking along the following lines for Blair Official Visit: Weds 11/4 South Lawn Arrival, meetings and press conference; Thurs 11/5 invite Blair to Nat'l Prayer Breakfast. Do something special in afternoon (maybe out of town). have Official Dinner that night.

On the dinner, there is no list yet. Just the preliminary work-up done long ago (before we moved Blair into '98). Capricia would like our input into the guest list soon. Europe should coordinate NSC input in form of a memo to Sandy covering suggestions to be forwarded to Capricia in a memo from me. Memo due by end of next week.

Thanks.

FROM: Miriam

Andy Manatos would like to bring Andy Athens to your office for a courtesy call on Jan 8 or 9. Andy, who I believe you last saw in October at the Hellenic Leadership Conference Dinner, has been re-elected as president of the World Council of Hellenes Abroad. (The President recently sent greetings to the Council's Convention.) Both Andys are likely to raise Greece-Turkey and Cyprus issues. They wrote to me yesterday urging that the Yilmaz visit secure not only the "right words" but the "right actions."

Given other demands on your time, I do not recommend the meeting. Also, I expect that there will be other opportunities this spring for you to meet/ brief them as well as others, in a larger group. Suggest that either Jim or -- preferably -- Don offer to meet them instead.

SRB does meeting _____.
Ask Jim instead _____.
Don should offer _____.

2/5/98 2PM

PRESIDENT WILLIAM JEFFERSON CLINTON
PRESS CONFERENCE WITH PM TONY BLAIR
THE WHITE HOUSE
FEBRUARY 6, 1998

It has been a pleasure to welcome my good friend Prime Minister Tony Blair to Washington.

His visit continues the great tradition of partnership between our nations – a partnership anchored by common values, driven by common vision, and flexible enough to meet the diverse challenges of each new time.

Later today, we will pay tribute to that heritage with a visit to the FDR Memorial. Earlier this century, President Roosevelt and Prime Minister Churchill led the community of free nations that prevailed as one in war. Now, on the eve of the 21st century, Prime Minister Blair and I are shaping the peace in a world that is rich with possibility and promise – but not yet free of risk.

The Prime Minister and I have a very similar outlook on preparing our countries for the future – with an economy that offers opportunity, a society that demands responsibility, and a nation that lives as a community. We share an understanding of the kind of changes sweeping this new world – and a belief in the importance of working together to harness these changes to our advantage.

We reviewed our progress in building an undivided Europe – welcoming Hungary, the Czech Republic and Poland into NATO... forging strong relations with all of Europe's new democracies, including Russia and Ukraine... and helping the parties in Bosnia to fulfill the promise of Dayton. Both our nations agree that we should take part in a follow-on security presence there when SFOR leaves in June.

We reaffirmed our determination to combat modern, cross-border threats – such as terrorism and the spread of nuclear, chemical and biological weapons.

[To be updated as necessary:] On Iraq, Saddam Hussein must know: We stand determined to prevent him from threatening his neighbors and the world with weapons of mass destruction. Even as we speak, the British aircraft carrier Invincible is patrolling the Persian Gulf alongside America's Fifth Fleet. The Prime Minister and I would certainly prefer to find a genuine diplomatic solution. We agree that the best way to stop Saddam from developing an arsenal of nuclear, chemical and biological weapons – and the missiles to deliver them – is to get the inspectors back to work, with full and free access to all suspect sites. But let me be clear: If the inspectors are not allowed to act, we will.

On Libya, 10 years have not lessened our desire for justice in the bombing of Pan Am 103. Libya must comply with the will of the world community and surrender for trial the two Libyans accused of that brutal crime.

We addressed our commitment to advance the cause of peace – and I welcomed Britain's efforts, as President of the European Union, to spur greater cooperation toward peace in the Middle East.

I also commended Prime Minister Blair for his courageous steps, in cooperation with the Irish government, to promote a climate of confidence and hope in Northern Ireland. The multi-party talks provide the best chance for a real solution to the conflict. I urge all the parties to show the vision these talks require to succeed. I also want to unequivocally condemn the recent sectarian killings and threats. Nothing worth having in Northern Ireland can be obtained through violence. I told the Prime Minister that America will continue to do all we can to advance the peace.

The recent financial crisis in Asia demands action from the international community. After all, on our increasingly interconnected planet, trouble on the far end of town can easily become a plague on everyone's house. The Prime Minister and I agree that every affected nation must take responsibility for implementing tough reforms – but those nations that do will have our full support through the International Monetary Fund.

And just as we reviewed our close cooperation in meeting challenges beyond our borders, we also looked at ways to work together to benefit our people at home. As President of both the European Union and the G-7, the United Kingdom will host two important summits in Birmingham this May. Prime Minister Blair and I want to use these summits to take action that makes a difference for our people's daily lives... that lifts their horizons and their dreams.

We must step up our efforts to combat drug traffickers and organized criminals and to help every child grow up in a safe community. We must shield our planet from the threat of global warming and bring our people the benefits of a growing economy and a cleaner environment. We must give our people the tools to make the most of their own lives – with world class education and training... support in moving from the shadows of welfare to the sunlight of honest work... access to the wonders of the Information Age... greater security in their retirement years. And we must continue to lead the world for security, prosperity and peace – guided by the lamp of liberty whose flame we have guarded throughout this century.

In 1942, in the midst of World War II, President Roosevelt sent a message to Prime Minister Churchill – saying, “When victory comes, we shall stand shoulder to shoulder in seeking to nourish the great ideals for which we fight.” Today, on the verge of the 21st century, his prediction has proved right. America is proud to stand with the United Kingdom and with Europe, and to work with its leader, Prime Minister Tony Blair, to build a future even brighter than the most brilliant days of our past.

Spalter/Final
REMARKS BY VICE PRESIDENT AL GORE
BREAKFAST FOR PRIME MINISTER TONY BLAIR
DEPARTMENT OF STATE
February 6, 1998

It really is an honor to welcome our friend and colleague, Prime Minister Tony Blair, and his talented partner and wife, Cherie (Sheh-REE) Booth Blair, to our State Department this morning.

I would also like to recognize some of the many distinguished guests who are here today.... and I apologize that I can't name you all. The eggs will get cold, if I do.

(ACKNOWLEDGMENTS FROM ADVANCE)

It is indeed a privilege for Tipper and me to host you all.

You know, it has become a well-worn cliché to speak of the "special relationship" between our peoples and our nations.

But the friendship between us truly is historic. Our two peoples, Britons and Americans, share common values that run like golden thread through our common history. That thread was woven in part in 1776, when our founders reached for the principles of John Locke and Edmund Burke in affirming the right of all men and women to life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness.

Our bonds were sealed by the blood of our parents and grandparents at the great 20th century battlefields of Europe and Asia and Africa and by that of our siblings and children most recently in berms and deserts of the Persian Gulf.

But today, those bonds are stronger than ever. And that is because there is not only a special relationship between our nations, but also a special relationship between the leaders of our nations. It is a bond forged not through our oldest history -- but through the newest ideas and approaches for meeting the challenges of the next century.

Both nations are recommitting themselves to the core values of work, family, and community -- and giving those cherished values new life in a new economy.

Both nations are reinventing the very idea of government -
- moving beyond the broken ideologies of the past, to achieve real results for our people.

Both nations are determined to lead in the world economy -- to lead in cutting-edge industries -- and to bring new hope and growth to our people, and free minds and free markets to citizens around the globe.

Both nations are summoning new generations to service, and citizenship, and a deep responsibility to one another.

Together, we are proving to the world that there is indeed a third way to govern a great nation -- and that its transforming power can span the Atlantic.

Another area of common purpose is one that is especially important to me -- and that is protecting our environment.

I was very proud to stand side by side with the United Kingdom as we forged that historic agreement at the Climate Change Summit in Kyoto-- and let me say what a particular privilege it was to work with my friend John Prescott, who so ably represented the British people at that important occasion. Against all odds, for the first time, all the industrialized nations of the world now are working together in common cause against the threat of global warming. And I would like to personally thank Prime Minister Blair for his leadership in helping to make this happen.

Finally, my friends, our nations now are working in tandem to create effective and efficient 21st century governments. Many of you know that for five years now, I have taken the lead in the President's effort to reinvent our own federal government.

As part of that initiative we created a "Hammer Award" to recognize teams of U.S. government employees who were making a real difference in creating a government that worked better and cost less. We thought a hammer was appropriate because it can create and it can destroy. Usually reinvention requires both, new ideas and approaches have to be built up and old ways of doing business have to be torn down.

Today, I am very proud to to present the first Hammer Award we have ever bestowed to a group of employees from a foreign government; and the first ever to be given to a joint US-British team.

The Forensic Chemistry Center at the U.S. Food and Drug Administration and the U.K. Medicine Control Agency have the same job -- preventing phony, dangerous counterfeit drugs from entering the market. Together they formed a "Hammer Team," and increased their efficiency by sharing technology, information, and resources. The American and the British people are getting safer medicines because of the joint efforts of these outstanding government employees. Now both our governments work better and cost less.

So, on behalf of these outstanding organizations, I would like to ask Fred Fiske and Roger Alexander to join the Prime Minister and me and accept the Hammer Award....

PRESENT AWARDS.....

Congratulations to you gentlemen, and to the many dedicated public servants with whom you work.

(PAUSE FOR APPLAUSE)

Now, it is a great pleasure to introduce to you a leader of tremendous vision and tenacity; a person of great humanity; a politician nearly as popular as the Spice Girls, but, -- I am happy to say -- still a diehard fan of American rock and roll; ladies and gentleman, the Prime Minister of the United Kingdom, the Right Honorable Tony Blair.....

Blair Official visit
February 4, 1998

Schedule

Q. What is latest on Prime Minister Blair's schedule here?

A. The Prime Minister arrives tonight around 5 p.m. at Andrews. We understand he is hosting a small dinner at Blair House. Tomorrow he is breakfasting with a number of members of the Congress at Blair House. I believe the focus is on Northern Ireland.

The formal part of the program starts tomorrow at 11 a.m. with the welcoming ceremony outside, weather permitting, followed by a short reception for the welcoming delegations inside the White House.

The President and Prime Minister will then have a private meeting over lunch in the Oval Office, starting around 1 p.m. (note for briefer: pool spray at the top). This will give the leaders a chance to discuss pressing topics on the agenda -- I expect Iraq and the Northern Ireland peace process will be dealt with in depth. This will be followed by an expanded meeting in the Cabinet Room, which will focus on G-7/8 and broader U.S.-UK and transatlantic issues. I imagine that the Asian situation will occupy a fair amount of time, as well as questions of employability, environment, law enforcement cooperation and trade. This is scheduled to wrap up shortly after 2 p.m.

The President and the Prime Minister will travel together to Montgomery Blair High School for an event with students, faculty and parents there.

The Prime Minister has calls on the Hill leadership later in the afternoon.

The Official Dinner takes place in the evening.

Friday morning the Vice President is hosting a breakfast for the Prime Minister at the State Department. The Prime Minister will come over here for the 11 a.m. press conference.

Early in the afternoon the leaders will take part in a discussion at Blair House focussing on public policy questions. (Sid Blumenthal has developed a press line on this for use)

Late in the day, the President and Mrs. Clinton and the Blairs will go to Camp David. (comment on the radio address, VPOTUS participation??) The Prime Minister will depart fairly early Saturday morning.

Later today, we will pay tribute to that heritage with a visit to the FDR Memorial. Earlier this century, President Roosevelt and Prime Minister Churchill led the community of free nations that prevailed as one in war. Now, on the eve of the 21st century, Prime Minister Blair and I are working to shape the peace in a world that is rich with promise – but not yet free of risk.

We reviewed our progress in building an undivided Europe – welcoming Hungary, the Czech Republic and Poland as NATO's newest members... forging strong relations with all of Europe's new democracies, including Russia and Ukraine... and helping the parties in Bosnia to fulfill the promise of Dayton. Bosnia's progress is clear, but not yet irreversible. Both our nations agree that we should take part in a follow-on security presence there when SFOR leaves in June.

We talked about the importance of standing strong against modern, cross-border threats – such as terrorism and the spread of nuclear, chemical and biological weapons.

[To be updated as necessary:] On Iraq, we are determined to prevent Saddam from threatening his neighbors and the world with weapons of mass destruction. Even as we speak, the British aircraft carrier Invincible is patrolling the Persian Gulf alongside America's Fifth Fleet. The Prime Minister and I would certainly prefer to find a genuine diplomatic solution. We agree that the best way to stop Saddam from developing an arsenal of nuclear, chemical and biological weapons – and the missiles to deliver them – is to get the inspectors back to work, with full and free access to all suspect sites. But if the inspectors are not allowed to act, we will. As we have throughout this century, America and the United Kingdom stand united in the face of this fundamental challenge to our peace and security.

On Libya, we reaffirmed that the passage of time has not lessened our desire for justice in the bombing of Pan Am 103. Libya must comply with the will of the world community and surrender for trial the two Libyans accused of that brutal crime.

We talked about our efforts to advance the cause of peace – and I welcomed Britain's efforts, as President of the European Union, to spur greater cooperation toward peace in the Middle East.

I also commended Prime Minister Blair for his bold steps to promote a climate of confidence and hope in Northern Ireland. The multi-party talks chaired by Senator Mitchell provide the best chance for a lasting solution to the conflict. I urge all the parties to show the vision and good will these talks require to succeed. I also want to unequivocally condemn the recent sectarian killings and threats. Nothing worth having in Northern Ireland can be obtained through violence. I told the Prime Minister that America will continue to do all we can to advance the peace.

The recent financial crisis in Asia demands action from the international community. After all, on our increasingly interconnected planet, trouble on the far end of town can easily become a plague on everyone's house. The Prime Minister and I agree that every affected nation must take responsibility for implementing tough reforms – but those nations that do will have our full support through the International Monetary Fund.

And just as we reviewed our close cooperation in meeting challenges beyond our borders, we also looked at ways to work together to benefit our people at home. As President of both the European Union and the G-7, the United Kingdom will host two important summits in Birmingham this May. Prime Minister Blair and I want to use these summits to take action that lifts our people's daily lives.

That includes stepping up our common efforts to fight drug trafficking and organized crime... working together to shield our planet from the threat of climate change... and finding ways to help all our people to thrive in the 21st century – through world class education and training, access to technology, pension portability, welfare reform – and other measures to promote competitiveness while preserving the social contract.

As you know, Prime Minister Blair and I see eye to eye on many of these issues. We share a commitment to education and to giving every child the keys to the Information Age – as we discussed with a group of young people and their parents at Montgomery Blair High School yesterday. We share a determination to help people find common ground and draw on their common values to build one nation. We share an understanding of the kind of changes that are sweeping our increasingly interdependent world – and a belief in the importance of working together to harness these changes to our advantage.

In 1942, in the midst of World War II, President Roosevelt sent a message to Prime Minister Churchill – saying, “When victory comes, we shall stand shoulder to shoulder in seeking to nourish the great ideals for which we fight.” Today, on the verge of the 21st century, his prediction has proved right. America is proud to stand with the United Kingdom and with Europe, and to work with its leader, Prime Minister Tony Blair, to build a future as true to our shared ideals as all our glorious past.

DRAFT POOL SPRAY POINTS FOR OVAL OFFICE MEETING

- o We discussed all the crises we must face together--in Bosnia, in the Middle East, and elsewhere.
- o We agreed that Saddam must comply with all UN requirements and ruled nothing out in responding to his challenges.
- o There is still important work to be done in Bosnia. It's clear we are going to be doing it there together.
- o The Prime Minister explained that we face both hope and challenge in Northern Ireland and asked that we stay engaged there. I assured him we will.

TOAST AT OFFICIAL DINNER

It gives me great pleasure to welcome to the White House the team which has now settled in at No. 10 Downing Street, Hillary's and my much valued friends and colleagues, Tony and Cherie Booth Blair.

From what I hear, Tony and Cherie are likely to be staying in their new place for quite a while. They were kind enough to welcome us there last summer very soon after the British election, and we are pleased finally to be able to return the favor.

Prime Minister Blair and I conferred today on a wide range of global and bilateral matters. Throughout our talks, it was clear that we almost always see both the challenges and the opportunities our two countries face in much the same way, and that we have the same or similar ideas about how to confront them. Though many of the awful specters which haunted this century have now passed, both of our countries remain outward-looking and engaged in the great missions of assuring peace and creating prosperity.

In very short order since his election, Tony has acted with lightening speed to bring renewed vigor to the political institutions of his own country. He has also brought fresh impetus to the peacekeeping work of the United Nations, to the effort to manage climate change, and to the important enterprise of the European Union. He, and his country, have in short order made themselves even more indispensable than they already were, and suddenly everyone is seeking a "special relationship" with Britain.

Under Tony's leadership, Britain remains in the vanguard of free-trading countries, attracting investment to its own shores and increasing its stake in the prosperity of others. The U.S. and UK are each other's largest investors. Many major U.S. enterprises, including supermarkets and hamburger restaurants, are now British-owned.

I raise my glass to these important and very welcome visitors. Their skill and their friendship are important assets, not only to the British people, but also to all of us who profit by the important role Britain plays in the world.

OPENING REMARKS AND Q'S AND A'S FOR PRESS CONFERENCE

The Oval Office meeting and the discussions among our officials covered a very wide range of global challenges, peacekeeping issues, and bilateral concerns. American and British views on all these matters are extremely close, as are our prescriptions for dealing with them.

The President and Prime Minister Blair discussed in particular the need to reduce tensions, terrorism, and aggression in the Middle East and the Persian Gulf and to bring Iraq into compliance with United Nations decisions.

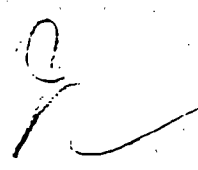

The Prime Minister briefed the President on progress in the Northern Ireland peace talks and encouraged continuing U.S. engagement in the peace process.

G-8 EMPLOYABILITY CONFERENCE (FEBRUARY 21-22, 1998)

Core Objectives

A conference that (1) generates support for U.S. success in job creation and for key Administration initiatives such as welfare-to-work, and (2) leads to Continental European Heads' commitment at Birmingham to needed structural reforms, supporting employment and growth.

Background

The G-8 Employability Conference (February 21 - 22, London) will convene G-8 finance and labor/education ministers to discuss reducing long-term unemployment in G-8 countries. In addition to Secretaries Rubin and Herman, National Economic Advisor Gene Sperling will attend. Themes for the conference's three sessions will be fleshed out over the next two weeks, but are shaping up along the following general lines:

- Session 1: Challenges facing G-8 Economies
  - Disincentives to work
  - Challenges facing current workers
  - Difficulties that keep people out of the workforce
- Session 2: Growth, Macroeconomic, and Structural Policy
  - Linkages between macroeconomic growth and stability
  - Structural policies: creating a framework for flexibility
  - Globalization: committing to free and open trade, supporting core international labor standards
- Session 3: Employability and inclusion
  - Education and preparation of the current workforce
  - Promoting work: welfare-to-work, other incentives
  - Balancing work and family: child care, etc.
  - Helping workers to feel less insecure: portable pensions

In addition to the Chair's Conclusion to be released February 22, UK organizers plan to have G-8 ministers prepare a report for Heads' discussion at Birmingham. Summit preparations will also address the November 1997 Kobe G-8 jobs conference, which focused on adjusting to structural change, human resource development, and employing youth and older workers.

Key Points

- This conference will be a good opportunity to showcase successful strategies implemented by the United Kingdom and, especially, the United States for getting higher proportions of our working-age populations into the workforce.
- Our success has depended on adaptability that would require structural change that the Continental Europeans have not been willing to undertake. A good outcome for Birmingham would be to gain their commitment to taking the necessary steps.

- Boosting European growth is essential for improving prospects for global growth, especially in view of weakness in Asia.

WELCOMING REMARKS FOR ARRIVAL CEREMONY

I am delighted to welcome to the White House my honored friend and colleague, the Prime Minister of the United Kingdom, the Right Honorable Tony Blair and his talented partner in life, Ms. Cherie Booth Blair.

The relationship between our countries, our peoples, and our governments is close and warm. As so often in the past, when a British Prime Minister and an American President meet, people will talk about what has often been called "The Special Relationship." In the complex and changing world of the 1990s, both the United States and Britain must reach out in many directions and in many ways to maintain peace and to build prosperity in the world. The Prime Minister comes here today not only as the respected and dynamic leader of one of the world's foremost nations, but also in his special capacity as President of the European Union.

I look forward to conferring with the Prime Minister not only about the crises of this world, but also concerning the unparalleled opportunities of our times. The United Kingdom, together with other nations, has worked tirelessly to implement a negotiated and humane peace in Bosnia. British troops in large numbers serve ably there, and they have helped in the difficult and important task of bringing war criminals to justice. The United Kingdom also plays a key role in deterring aggression and terrorism in the Persian Gulf. The Prime Minister and his government have infused new life and hope in the Northern Ireland peace process, which Americans follow with great interest. I am anxious to hear British views on these and other challenges the United States, Britain, and the European Union jointly face.

But let us not forget that Britain is also a pioneer of trade and prosperity, as well as of reform. Prime Minister Blair has made clear his commitment to removing barriers to trade and to promoting peace through growth and prosperity. His special responsibilities in the European Union and his country's role as host this spring of the G-8 Summit make these British virtues especially valuable, and I look forward to our discussions of world financial developments and prospects for creating jobs in Europe, in America, and in the world.

When our predecessors Franklin Roosevelt and Sir Winston Churchill met, their task was to chart progress in dealing with the century's gravest and bloodiest conflict. The Prime Minister and I meet in more fortunate times. While we still face the real perils of terrorism, hunger, and environmental decay, we also live in a time of unprecedented hope. The world is now free of the colossal threats of the wartime and Cold-War eras. Despite poverty and suffering, more people today by far live in prosperity and freedom than was the case half a century ago. The United States, the United Kingdom, the nations of the European Union, and all the democratic states of this world have much to gain--and much to do--if we continue working closely together. I look forward to conferring with the Prime Minister on how we seize this chance.

- o We discussed all the crises we must face together--in Bosnia, in the Middle East, and elsewhere.
- o We agreed that Saddam must comply with all UN requirements and ruled nothing out in responding to his challenges.
- o There is still important work to be done in Bosnia. It's clear we are going to be doing it there together.
- o The Prime Minister explained that we face both hope and challenge in Northern Ireland and asked that we stay engaged there. I assured him we will.

OPENING REMARKS AND Q'S AND A'S FOR PRESS CONFERENCE

The Oval Office meeting and the discussions among our officials covered a very wide range of global challenges, peacekeeping issues, and bilateral concerns. American and British views on all these matters are extremely close, as are our prescriptions for dealing with them.

The President and Prime Minister Blair discussed in particular the need to reduce tensions, terrorism, and aggression in the Middle East and the Persian Gulf and to bring Iraq into compliance with United Nations decisions.

The Prime Minister briefed the President on progress in the Northern Ireland peace talks and encouraged continuing U.S. engagement in the peace process.

(Q's and A's to be provided after package submitted.)

UNITED KINGDOM

February 2, 1998

MACROECONOMIC OVERVIEW

The UK economy's prospects are positive in its sixth year of expansion. GDP growth is expected to approach 3.5% for 1997. It has been growing well above trend for twelve months, and most analysts estimate that spare capacity has been used up. Consumer spending has been a leading factor, stimulated by rising income expectations, growing household wealth, rapid money and credit expansion, and 2Q97 one-time consumer windfall gains from building societies' stock conversions (partly counter-balanced by lower retail sales in September, following the death of the Princess of Wales). Growth is widely expected to moderate in 1998 as consumer demand cools and sterling strength weighs on competitiveness. The question is how sharp this correction will be.

The current account balance is estimated to have deteriorated in the second half of 1997, reflecting sterling's sustained appreciation since early 1996 (see attached chart). External balances appear poised to deteriorate further this year as lagged effects of sterling's strength kick in.

There are signs that monetary and fiscal tightening had an effect in late 1997, as inflation moderated in December (showing a 2.7% change over the preceding twelve months, compared to 2.8% recorded in November and October). The Bank of England, newly charged with independence on monetary policy, remains concerned about prospects for inflation, and may raise rates in its February 5 monetary policy meeting, after having raised rates four times in 1997. Among the Bank's concerns is tightness in the labor market: the unemployment rate (5.2%) marked a seventeen year low, and survey data suggest emerging capacity constraints.

PM Blair's 1997-8 budget embodied a small fiscal tightening, adding to the considerable tightening in the Major government's November 1996 budget. Labour kept to its election promise not to raise personal taxes, and some analysts assert that an important opportunity to use fiscal policy to suppress domestic demand was missed. But the UK budget deficit is nevertheless shrinking, thanks to cyclical factors, more effective tax collection measures and spending reduction policies.

MAIN POLICY ISSUES

Inflation bears watching: When the BOE raised rates to 7.25% in November 1997, they stated that a further tightening may be needed to achieve the government's inflation target of 2.5% over a two year horizon. The Bank appears to have softened its view on further tightening in its quarterly report released a week later. Some observers anticipate a further rate increase when the BOE Monetary Policy Committee meets on February 5.

Record low unemployment: Observers ascribe some portion of the 17 year low in claimant unemployment (5.1% in November 1997) to a late 1996 change in unemployment compensation policies. But other means of measuring also show unemployment falling at an accelerating rate, and the workforce in employment is growing, with the services sector the main area of growth. So far only limited upward pressure on wages has emerged, but unfilled vacancies remain high and there are anecdotal reports of skill shortages.

UNCLASSIFIED - SENSITIVE

Continued Sterling Strength Could Hurt Current Account and Manufacturing: Exports appear to have peaked in July 1997, while imports have continued to increase, according to monthly data. The trade balance appears to be widening against non-EU countries, even though the pound has appreciated most strongly against other EU currencies.

MACROECONOMIC POLICY MIX

Fiscal consolidation proceeding: While fiscal deficits have exceeded government targets over the past two years, tight medium-term spending plans will help further consolidation (real government expenditure is expected to increase by only 0.7% for 1997 and 1998). The Public Sector Borrowing Requirement has shown a sharp improvement over last year, with total PSBR for April-December 1997 at BPS £6.1 billion, compared with £16.3 billion for the same period in 1996, with the improvement largely due to improved tax revenues. IMF estimates of the structural deficit show a 2.2 percentage point reduction for 1997, with a further 1.2 point cut for 1998.

Growth will slow to more sustainable levels: Mildly tightening fiscal policy, tighter monetary policy, and strong sterling should combine to slow growth from the 3.5% estimated for 1997 to 2.3% forecast for 1998, near trend.

RECENT DEVELOPMENTS

EMU: The Chancellor announced in October 1997 that the UK would not enter the EMU at the 1999 start and that membership during this Parliament was not in the UK interest, citing the need for cyclical convergence and more flexible labor markets. Most observers have written off UK entry before late 2002. The UK reportedly does not intend to rejoin the ERM, but will take other steps to prepare for possible membership.

Bank of England is granted monetary policy authority, and a consolidated financial regulatory agency is launched: The Labour Government turned interest rate decisions over to the BOE but will still set an inflation target for the Bank to meet. Labour's central target is 2.5% for underlying inflation, and the Chancellor has signaled that this target may be cut if appropriate, as the UK seeks to converge more closely with other European economies. The Financial Services Authority, formally launched in October 1997, will regulate all aspects of financial services (retail to wholesale banking, securities, insurance, and accounting) once statutory changes are in place.

Sterling's appreciation: Sterling's real effective exchange rate index was 112.3 for January (base year 1990), its highest level since 1989. Over the course of 1997, sterling rose by 13.5% against the DM and depreciated 1.5% against the dollar. The BOE expects sterling to retrench but abandoned an earlier projection that it would depreciate 10% over the next two years. BOE Governor George has attributed much of sterling's strength to market perceptions about EMU.

SUBJECT: Blair Meetings

Attached is the revised version of the briefer on the Special Finance Ministers meeting. (A sentence has been dropped from the first TP indicating a possible April date for the meeting-- new guidance is no talk about dates).

I am seeking clearance on an Employability paper with TPs much like those I scribbled on a fax to you, which I will fax over as soon as it has been approved.

Sounds

good -- but recommend getting NEC (Brainard) feedback first. Lael is at economic subcabinet meetings until this evening. Lori -- can you touch base with Laurel later in the day -- even if you have not reached lael and get a gameplan. Thanks all.
